The CDC Division of Oral Health seeks to improve the oral health of the nation by extending the use of proven strategies to prevent oral diseases, enhancing surveillance of oral diseases, strengthening the nation's oral health infrastructure, and guiding infection control in dentistry. The division supports programs that can reduce childhood tooth decay and oral disease in adults; develops activities that address the oral health needs of an aging population, and implements strategies to reduce disparities in oral health status. This includes expanding the capacity and ability of state health departments to implement community water fluoridation and school-based or -linked dental sealant programs. The Division also is recognized for its national leadership in assisting states, territories, and other countries to collect oral health data and apply new methods for oral health surveillance.
